New York law established a system for maintaining roads which required that each township be divided into road districts and that all men in each district were required to work on the roads. Each district was under the supervision of a path master or overseer elected at an annual town meeting held on the first Tuesday of April. At the same meeting, three commissioners of highways were elected. The overseer had sixteen days from the date of this election to list every male living in his district who was twenty-one years or older (a free man) or property owner (a freeholder). Each man devoted at least one day a year to keeping the roads in repair in the district in which he lived. This included clearing brush, stones, and fallen trees; repairing bridges; filling holes; and in the winter clearing paths through the snow. One could hire someone to serve in his place, but failure to fulfill the obligation in person or by proxy resulted in a fine enforceable by law.¹ The office of Overseer of Highways was not to be taken lightly. The overseer was liable to a fine of ten dollars for each failure to notify those who were required to work on the roads and for each delinquency in performing any other task assigned him. Two weeks prior to the town meeting the following year, he was required to certify what work had been done and, by whom, and to report anyone who had not fulfilled his obligation.

The name of Joseph Sr. first appears in Road District 26 for April 1817, consistent with his having arrived in the latter part of 1816.² The town's "Record of Roads" shows that District 26 began on Main Street in the center of the village of Palmyra (the so-called "Four Corners" where four churches now stand) near where the road from Canandaigua intersected, running west until it crossed into what is now Macedon Township. The district included a small portion of the present Walworth road on the north side of Mud Creek and also a road running south toward the adjoining township of Farmington (now Manchester).³

This 1817 list basically follows the order in which individual properties were situated as one moves west on Main Street, with Joseph Smith Sr., listed as living at the west end of Main Street. Joseph Sr.'s name occurs again at the same location in District 26 in 1818 and 1819. In April 1820, the name of Alvin Smith appears for the first time on the road tax list among the merchants on Main Street. Alvin turned twenty-one in February 1819 and his absence from the 1819 road list may indicate he had been hired out or was not considered twenty-one years old that year. Joseph Sr.'s name appears at the end of the list, showing he is now living outside the business district and near the Palmyra-Farmington town line, where the road district ended.

A typescript copy by Doris Nesbit (n.d.) is also in the King's Daughters Library, Palmyra, New York. The record is headed, "A Copy of the Several Lists of the Mens Names Liable to Work on the Highways in the Town of Palmyra in the Year 1804." The original record itself cannot be located at present.
